the garden of the Turners Center.

Claudia Appiani discovered her love of music and especially for singing when she was a child. At the age of 15 she took first singing lessons from her father Armando Appiani, an internationally well-known opera singer and vocal teacher in Frankfurt, Germany.

After the A-level examination she first studied English and French at the Johann-Wolfgang-Goethe University in Frankfurt before she decided to start professional vocal training.

At the "Scuola del Belcanto", an opera and singing school which is officially recognized by the Ministry for Science and Art, she was trained to be an opera and concert singer. Besides the classical singing technique her studies included speech training, drama, theory, piano lessons, movement training and singing pedagogics.

The main focus of her repertoire are the dramatic soprano parts of the Italian Opera, but she also likes to sing pieces of French and German language composers and her musical and vocal flexibility allows her the successful excursion to the musical genre, too.

Although her roots are in classical music Claudia Appiani loves the combination of different musical styles and so she often presents cross-over music by singing classic pop songs with the traditional belcanto technique accompanied by a mixture of classical as well as elements of contemporary music.

She often shows this versatility by singing operatic arias, musical and pop songs during one concert and so she is in demand singer for classical as well as special events.

Her appearances brought Claudia Appiani through Europe, Japan and to the USA where she electrified the audience and critics by the effortlessness of her singing and her expressiveness.

Besides this she participated in German television productions and CD recordings. Her CD "Popular Classics" will be available after this concert.

Admission for this concert, that is definitely an outstanding event and will be held in the garden of the Turner Center on Wilshire and Highland, is $20.
